Where is it dangerous to be out?

More than a third of the 196 countries recognized on this planet consider homosexuality illegal.

We commonly hear the refrain, "LGBT people are a part of the world, and we deny them the very same rights that are enjoyed by everyone else." This is a powerful statement, and one that is often repeated in our daily lives. However, what we may not realize is that this statement is not only true, but it is also true for people who identify as gay, lesbian, bisexual, and transgender.

In many countries, the rights of LGBT people are severely restricted. This can take many forms, including legal restrictions, social discrimination, and even violence. In some cases, LGBT people are persecuted and killed simply because of their sexual orientation or gender identity.

The United Nations has been working to address these issues, and has adopted several resolutions and declarations that recognize the rights of LGBT people. However, the implementation of these rights is often hindered by lack of resources, political will, and social acceptance.

So, the next time you hear someone say, "LGBT people are a part of the world," remember that they are talking about more than just people. They are talking about people who face significant challenges and obstacles simply because of who they are.

We must continue to work towards creating a world where everyone, regardless of sexual orientation or gender identity, is treated with respect and dignity. Only then will we truly be able to say that we are all part of the world.
